Gentlemen:

Our records indicate the above well was disconnected from the pipeline 9-5-59 but there is no indication of why the well was disconnected or what your company's future plans are for putting the well back on production or for permanently plugging and abandoning it.

As you know, the industry is presently faced with a casing corrosion problem in certain areas of the San Juan Basin. It is the Commission's thought that the possibility of casing leaks exists in some of these temporarily abandoned wells. As they are not producing and are not tested it is impossible to determine whether or not this may be true. In the event of undetected casing leaks the possibility exists of communication between gas and water sands. Over a prolonged period of time this could seriously impair gas reservoirs and charge water sands with gas.

We are, therefore, requesting that a status report and statement of future intent be made for the above well so that a determination may be made of what action should be taken.

Yours very truly

1. The first step in the process of identifying a problem is to determine whether or not a problem exists. This is often done by comparing the current situation with a desired state. If there is a discrepancy, a problem exists. 2. Once a problem is identified, the next step is to define the problem. This involves determining the scope of the problem, the resources available, and the constraints. 3. The third step is to generate potential solutions. This is often done by brainstorming or using a structured problem-solving technique. 4. The fourth step is to evaluate the potential solutions. This involves comparing the solutions against the criteria established in the previous step. 5. The fifth step is to select a solution. This is often done by choosing the solution that is most feasible and effective. 6. The sixth step is to implement the solution. This involves putting the solution into action and monitoring its progress. 7. The seventh step is to evaluate the results. This involves comparing the actual results with the desired state to determine if the problem has been solved. 8. The eighth step is to document the process. This involves recording the steps taken and the results achieved. 9. The ninth step is to communicate the results. This involves sharing the results with the relevant stakeholders. 10. The tenth step is to review the process. This involves reflecting on the process and identifying areas for improvement.
