This well has not produced for more than one year because it is not capable of flowing against the current high line pressures in the area. These high line pressures are the result, in part, of the installation by various operators of numerous wellsite compressors on the more prolific wells in the area. The Frew Federal #9 has historically been capable of commercial production at lower line pressures, but does not have a gas volume capability which would support the cost of its own compressor. Thus the well has the potential to produce when line pressures come down, but cannot do so at this time.

Plugging the well or temporarily abandoning the well would eliminate its ability to produce as line pressures drop because the cost of re-activating it would be prohibitive. Therefore, it is our intention to maintain the shut-in status indefinitely as the only practical method of
