simply collapse.

The two champion teams from Carlsbad hail from Carlsbad High School and P.R. Leyva Middle School.

The Leyva team consists of eighth-graders A.J. Sepich, Sheralyn Burnett and Berry Dungan; seventh-graders John Kearney and Missy Carrier; and sixth-graders David Livingstone and Brian Christopherson. This team also won a special award for their level of creativity. In the end, their structure weighed only 11.4 grams and held 390.2 pounds.

The CHS team, known as "CHS Blue," is made up of Lisa Kearney and Alike Pricatley. Their structure held over 20,000 times its own weight.

A third team, "CHS Silver," placed second, finishing with more style points than any other team.

"All the students did so well. They did a great job representing Carlsbad," Christopherson said.

He added special praise for CHS Blue, which lost three of its five members at the last minute due to academic ineligibility and lack of interest.

"Lisa and Alike decided not to quit. They wrote their songs and built everything on the bus ride up Albuquerque," Christopherson said. "The judges loved their never-die spirit."

Eva Livingstone, mother of Leyva's David Livingstone, said she loves how Odyssey of the Mind can make high-level learning fun.

"The kids learn a technical sense of problem solving by mixing team work and creatity. Students do all the work. I just think it's a great program," Livingstone said.

Her son, David, agreed.

"I've learned so much about architecture. It's fun, too, working with other kids and meeting so many new people," the younger Livingstone said.

But Russia, angry about 32 days of airstrikes against Yugoslavia, indicated it would ignore an embargo. "According to international law, sanctions cannot be imposed unless they are approved by the (U.N.) Security Council," Russian Foreign Minister Igor Ivanov said on a trip to Egypt. "We will continue delivering oil in keeping with our international commitments." Russia and Libya are Yugoslavia's key oil suppliers.

And in Moscow, former Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin said the world "may slip toward a third world war, the final war" as a result of NATO's bombing. Chernomyrdin, Russia's mediator on Kosovo, said he had received invitations from the leaders of several NATO countries to discuss his recent efforts to end the crisis.

Concerns about stopping ships also were heard at the summit. "According to international rules, it is an act of war" to stop and forcibly search ships on the sea, French President Jacques Chirac said. "So we must be very cautious." He said France supports NATO's determination to prevent any material useful to Yugoslav military forces from reaching them and he urged all democratic nations to support the embargo.

Clinton defended the idea of searches, saying it was unreasonable to ask pilots to risk their lives attacking oil depots when Milosevic could get fuel from ships. Clinton said he did not expect that sea searches would lead to violence "but we have to be firm about it" and "take every reasonable means" to ensure the success of any embargo.

NATO Secretary-General Javier Solana said the alliance would do "whatever is in our means and our capabilities" to enforce such an embargo. He said he hoped it would not be necessary to challenge Russian ships. Solana would not state a legal basis for interdicting ships at sea, but he told

In the Mellon auditorium where, 50 years ago, President Truman led allies in signing NATO's founding treaty, pledging a one-for-all, all-for-one common defense.

The summit expanded beyond the 19 NATO countries to include leaders of 23 nations in a partnership with the alliance. They all were invited to the White House for dinner under a huge tent on the South Lawn.

Despite objections from Russia to NATO expansion, the leaders agreed to leave their door open to more new members.

The alliance expanded to 19 countries this year with the inclusion of former Russian satellites Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic.
