Stressors are defined as any event or condition that is perceived as a challenge or demand that exceeds the individual's resources and coping mechanisms (Kawachi & Berkman, 2001). Stressors are the external events or conditions that trigger the stress response. They can be categorized into various types, including acute stressors, chronic stressors, and major life events. Acute stressors are short-lived events that cause immediate stress, such as a car accident or a job interview. Chronic stressors are long-lasting conditions that cause ongoing stress, such as a chronic illness or a stressful job. Major life events are significant changes in a person's life that can cause stress, such as marriage, divorce, or the death of a loved one. Stressors can have a negative impact on an individual's health and well-being, leading to physical and psychological problems. Understanding stressors is important for identifying the causes of stress and developing effective coping strategies to manage them.
