GEOLOGIC DISCUSSION

EAST LOVINGTON PROSPECT

Lea County, New Mexico

The primary objective of the captioned prospect is the Lower Strawn limestone at a depth of approximately 11,500'. The Prospect is located approximately two miles east of Lovington, New Mexico.

Regionally it is positioned on the north end of the prolific NE Lovington Strawn complex. Production is from a wide spread series of Strawn age algal mounds or reefs which were developed on the east and north flank of a large regional N-S trending pre-Penn structure. The mounds will support from one (1) to six (6) wells depending on their individual size. Detailed seismic definition of the isolated mounds is a prerequisite to help establish the parameters within which to drill the initial exploratory test well. The risk is extremely high, and it is therefore absolutely essential that the test be located within these parameters or you have lost the reservoir. The parameters are established by evidence of seismic "reef anomalies" (see Exhibit "E") which will be discussed below.

Bridge Oil Company's proposed location is shown on Exhibit "D", which is a seismic Strawn Structure Map. The East Lovington Prospect is well controlled seismically. There are five (5) lines of control through the prospect area on a relatively detailed grid. These lines are tied to at least five (5) additional lines of control in the overall area. The interpretation on the Strawn indicates a minor closure under the drillsite as well as an abundant number of seismic "reef anomalies" associated with the area of closure. The "anomalies", shown in orange on the Map, are seismic "signatures" normally indicating a reefing or mounding within the Strawn that is associated with porous rock. The "signatures" are very critical in locating algal reef mounds, and in view of the small size of individual mounds, a close grid is necessary to confirm a cluster or continuance of the "anomalies" from line to line. The number of wells and subsequent production potential of individual mounds is directly related to the number and size of seismic "anomalies" associated with the mound. A case-in-point is the Foran #1-State "AA" in the NE/4 SE/4 of Section 12 (drillsite section). Pressures on a DST of the Strawn indicated a limited reservoir which related quite well to the minimal "anomaly" shown on the map. The well has produced a little over a year and has already dropped from 576 BOPD to 45 BOPD. The type log submitted, Exhibit "F", is this well.

As indicated by the cluster of "anomalies" associated with the proposed drillsite, the prospective mound is small - probably two (2) wells. As stated above, it is imperative that the initial location be surrounded by as many interpreted "reef anomalies" as possible. For this reason Bridge had no alternative in proposing the unorthodox location, 990' FNL and 2310' FEL of Section 12, T-16-S, R-36-E.
