At the same time, the Commission has been working to ensure that the information it receives is accurate and reliable. This has involved a number of steps, including the development of a code of ethics for its staff, the implementation of a system of internal controls, and the establishment of a process for the review and approval of all information received. The Commission has also been working to improve its communication with the public, including the development of a website and the holding of public hearings. These efforts have helped to build trust in the Commission and ensure that it is able to carry out its mandate effectively.
