QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

The Commission on the Status of Women was established in 1961 by the President of the United States to study and report on the status of women in the United States. The Commission is composed of members from both the executive and legislative branches of the federal government, as well as representatives from the private sector. The Commission's work is to identify areas where women are disadvantaged and to recommend ways to improve their status. The Commission has held numerous public hearings and has issued several reports. The Commission's work is ongoing and it is always open to public input.
