THE COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF
THE AMERICAN INDIAN

The Commission on the Status of the American Indian was created by the President of the United States in 1971. Its purpose was to study the problems of the American Indian and to recommend ways to improve their lives. The Commission has held many public hearings and has received many suggestions from Indians and non-Indians alike. It has also conducted extensive research into the history and present conditions of the American Indian. The Commission's report, "The American Indian: A Report to the President," was published in 1973. It contains many recommendations for improving the lives of American Indians, including recommendations for education, health care, and employment. The Commission believes that these recommendations are essential for the well-being of the American Indian people.
