THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO
DEPARTMENT OF POLITICAL SCIENCE
POLITICAL SCIENCE 301

1. The first part of the course will focus on the theoretical foundations of political science, including the study of power, authority, and the state. We will explore the work of classical theorists such as Hobbes, Locke, and Rousseau, as well as modern theorists like Weber and Durkheim. This section will provide a solid grounding in the basic concepts and methods of the discipline.

2. The second part of the course will examine the political systems of various countries, with a particular emphasis on the United States and the United Kingdom. We will analyze the structure and function of these systems, as well as the role of the media and public opinion in the political process. This section will help students understand the practical implications of the theories discussed in the first part of the course.

3. The final part of the course will focus on the role of the individual in politics. We will explore the concept of political participation and the factors that influence it, as well as the role of the individual in the formation of public policy. This section will provide students with a deeper understanding of the political process and the ways in which individuals can influence it.

The first lecture will introduce the course and provide an overview of the topics to be covered. We will begin by discussing the definition of political science and the scope of the discipline. We will then explore the historical development of political science, from its roots in ancient Greek philosophy to its emergence as a distinct academic discipline in the late 19th century. This lecture will also introduce the key concepts and methods of political science, including the study of power, authority, and the state.

1.1

The first part of the lecture will focus on the study of power and authority. We will explore the concept of power and the ways in which it is exercised in political systems. We will also discuss the concept of authority and the ways in which it is legitimized. This section will provide a foundation for understanding the role of power and authority in the political process.

LECTURE 2

The second lecture will focus on the study of the state. We will explore the concept of the state and the ways in which it is defined. We will also discuss the role of the state in society and the ways in which it is legitimized. This section will provide a foundation for understanding the role of the state in the political process.
