JOINT COMMISSION ON CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS

COMMISSION ON CONSTITUTIONAL REFORMS

The Commission on Constitutional Reforms was established by the President of the United States in 1987. Its mandate was to study the existing Constitution and to recommend reforms that would improve the functioning of the government and protect the rights of citizens. The Commission's report, "The Constitution and the Future of the Nation," was published in 1990. It contained a number of recommendations, including the creation of a new judicial branch, the establishment of a new executive branch, and the creation of a new legislative branch. The Commission's report was widely debated and its recommendations were not adopted. However, the Commission's work has been influential in the ongoing debate about the future of the Constitution.
