THE UNIVERSITY OF CHICAGO PRESS

The University of Chicago Press is a not-for-profit corporation organized under the laws of the State of Illinois. It is a member of the Association of American Universities. The Press is committed to the highest standards of academic excellence and to the advancement of knowledge and scholarship. It publishes a wide range of books, journals, and electronic resources in the humanities, social sciences, and natural sciences.

The Press's publishing program is guided by a Board of Directors, which is composed of representatives of the University of Chicago and the academic community. The Board is responsible for the overall direction and management of the Press. The Press's operations are overseen by a President, who is elected by the Board. The President is responsible for the day-to-day management of the Press and for the appointment and dismissal of its senior staff.

The Press's financial resources are derived from a variety of sources, including the University of Chicago, private foundations, and individual donors. The Press's income is used to support its publishing program and to fund a variety of other activities, including the maintenance of its buildings and the payment of its staff. The Press's financial statements are audited annually by an independent accounting firm.

The Press's commitment to academic excellence is reflected in its selection of authors and its editorial standards. The Press's books and journals are reviewed by experts in the field, and the Press's editorial staff is composed of leading scholars in their respective disciplines. The Press's commitment to academic excellence is also reflected in its commitment to the highest standards of production and distribution.

The Press's commitment to academic excellence is also reflected in its commitment to the highest standards of customer service. The Press's books and journals are distributed through a network of booksellers and libraries, and the Press's website provides a wealth of information about its publications. The Press's commitment to academic excellence is also reflected in its commitment to the highest standards of ethical conduct.
