DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

When in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of Nature and of Nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

These United Colonies, therefore, do hereby declare their independence.

That the United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States, that they have the power of war, peace, commerce, and all other jurisdiction which may be necessary for them to do so, is their right, but it is their duty to declare that they are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States.

That the United Colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States, that they have the power of war, peace, commerce, and all other jurisdiction which may be necessary for them to do so, is their right, but it is their duty to declare that they are, and of right ought to be, free and independent States.
