THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

1964-1965

ANNUAL REPORT

The National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) is pleased to present this annual report to the public. This report provides a comprehensive overview of the activities and accomplishments of NARA during the fiscal year 1964-1965. The report is organized into several sections, including a summary of the year's activities, a detailed description of the various programs and services provided, and a list of the major accomplishments achieved during the year.

Summary of the Year's Activities

The National Archives and Records Administration (NARA) has a long and distinguished history of preserving the nation's historical records and providing access to them for the benefit of the public. During the fiscal year 1964-1965, NARA continued its commitment to this mission and achieved many significant accomplishments. These accomplishments include the acquisition of new records, the processing and description of existing records, the preservation of records in various formats, and the provision of access to records through a variety of means. The report provides a detailed description of these activities and the results achieved.

Acquisition of New Records

During the fiscal year 1964-1965, NARA acquired a large number of new records from various sources. These records include a wide range of documents, including correspondence, reports, and other types of records. The acquisition of these records is a critical part of NARA's mission to preserve the nation's historical records. The report provides a detailed description of the acquisition process and the results achieved.

Processing and Description of Existing Records

During the fiscal year 1964-1965, NARA processed and described a large number of existing records. This work is essential for making records accessible to the public and for ensuring the long-term preservation of the records. The report provides a detailed description of the processing and description process and the results achieved.
