THE AG IN THE HIDEOUT

The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the car was the cold, crisp air. It was a relief after the warm, stuffy interior. I looked around, taking in the sights and sounds of the neighborhood. The houses were old, with peeling paint and broken windows. The streets were dirty, with trash scattered everywhere. I felt a sense of unease, a feeling that I was in a dangerous place.

I walked down the street, my hands in my pockets. I was alone, and I felt vulnerable. The silence was oppressive, and I could hear my own footsteps echoing in the empty streets. I was trying to find a way out, a way to escape this place.

I turned a corner, and I saw a man standing in the middle of the street. He was looking at me, and I felt a chill run down my spine. He was wearing a dark coat and a hat, and he had a serious expression on his face. I stopped, and he walked towards me.

"What are you doing here?" he asked, his voice low and gravelly. I didn't know what to say, so I just looked at him. He was looking at me, and I felt a sense of dread.

"I'm just a tourist," I said, my voice shaking. He nodded, and he turned away from me. I watched him go, and I felt a sense of relief. I was alone again, and I was safe.

I walked on, my heart pounding. I was still in the same place, but I felt like I was in a different world. The air was different, the sounds were different, and the people were different. I was in a place where I didn't belong.
