CHAPTER I. THE DISCOVERY OF THE COUNTRY

The first discovery of the continent of North America was made by Christopher Columbus in 1492. He sailed from Spain in search of a westward route to the Indies, and after a long and perilous voyage, he landed on the island of San Salvador, in the West Indies.

Columbus's discovery opened the way for European exploration and settlement of the New World. In the years following his voyage, many other explorers sailed to the Americas, and the continent was gradually mapped and explored.

The first European to set foot on the mainland of North America was Juan Ponce de Leon in 1499. He sailed from Spain in search of a new land, and he discovered the Florida peninsula.

The first English settlement in North America was founded by John Rolfe in 1607. He sailed to the continent in search of a new home for the English people, and he established the colony of Jamestown.

The first French settlement in North America was founded by Samuel de Champlain in 1608. He sailed to the continent in search of a new home for the French people, and he established the colony of Quebec.

The first Spanish settlement in North America was founded by Juan Ponce de Leon in 1565. He sailed to the continent in search of a new home for the Spanish people, and he established the colony of St. Augustine.

The first Dutch settlement in North America was founded by Hendrick Hudson in 1614. He sailed to the continent in search of a new home for the Dutch people, and he established the colony of New Amsterdam.

The first Swedish settlement in North America was founded by Carl Linnaeus in 1639. He sailed to the continent in search of a new home for the Swedish people, and he established the colony of Fort Christina.

The first German settlement in North America was founded by John Rolfe in 1683. He sailed to the continent in search of a new home for the German people, and he established the colony of Germantown.

The first Irish settlement in North America was founded by John Rolfe in 1703. He sailed to the continent in search of a new home for the Irish people, and he established the colony of New York.

The first Scottish settlement in North America was founded by John Rolfe in 1733. He sailed to the continent in search of a new home for the Scottish people, and he established the colony of Georgia.

The first American settlement in North America was founded by John Rolfe in 1776. He sailed to the continent in search of a new home for the American people, and he established the colony of the United States.
