1. The first step in the process of the investigation is the identification of the problem. This is done by the investigator who is assigned to the case. The investigator must first determine the nature of the problem and the scope of the investigation. This is done by interviewing the complainant and the accused, and by reviewing the evidence. The investigator must also determine the jurisdiction of the investigation and the applicable laws. Once the problem has been identified, the investigator must then develop a plan of action. This plan should outline the steps that will be taken to investigate the problem, and it should also specify the resources that will be required. The investigator must then implement the plan and collect the evidence. This is done by interviewing witnesses, conducting interviews with the accused, and by reviewing the evidence. Once the evidence has been collected, the investigator must then analyze the evidence and determine the results of the investigation. This is done by comparing the evidence to the applicable laws and by determining the facts of the case. Finally, the investigator must prepare a report of the investigation. This report should outline the findings of the investigation and should also include recommendations for the appropriate action to be taken.
