REPORT OF THE AMERICAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

The American Medical Association, organized in 1847, is the largest and most influential of the medical organizations in the United States. It is composed of more than 40,000 members, representing the medical profession in all parts of the country. The Association's primary purpose is to advance the science and art of medicine, to protect the public health, and to promote the highest standards of medical practice. It accomplishes these ends through its various departments, committees, and publications.

The Association's work is carried on through its various departments, which are organized to handle different aspects of the medical profession. These departments include the Department of Legislation, the Department of Education, the Department of Research, and the Department of Public Health.

The Department of Legislation is responsible for the Association's efforts to influence public policy and legislation. It works to secure the enactment of laws that will protect the public health and the interests of the medical profession. It also works to oppose any legislation that would be detrimental to the medical profession or the public health.

The Department of Education is responsible for the Association's efforts to improve the medical education of the future. It works to secure the highest standards of medical education and to promote the development of the medical profession. It also works to improve the medical education of the general public.

The Department of Research is responsible for the Association's efforts to advance the science and art of medicine. It works to promote research in all branches of medicine and to disseminate the results of such research. It also works to improve the medical profession's understanding of the latest advances in medicine.

The Department of Public Health is responsible for the Association's efforts to protect the public health. It works to promote the highest standards of medical practice and to protect the public health from all sources of danger. It also works to improve the public health through its various programs and activities.
