The Commission on the Status of Women, established in 1946, was the first of its kind. It was created by the United Nations to address the needs and concerns of women worldwide.

The Commission's mandate was to promote the status of women and to ensure their full participation in the development of their countries. It has since held numerous sessions, each with a specific theme, and has produced a wealth of reports and recommendations.

One of its key achievements was the adoption of the Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women in 1968.

The Commission also played a significant role in the development of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) in 1979.
