THE 1968 ELECTION

The 1968 election was a pivotal moment in American history. It was a year of deep division and uncertainty, with the Vietnam War reaching its peak and the civil rights movement gaining momentum. The election itself was a close race between Richard Nixon, Hubert H. Humphrey, and George Wallace. Nixon's victory marked the beginning of a new era in American politics, one of conservatism and law and order.

Nixon's campaign was built on a platform of "law and order" and "silent majority." He promised to bring stability to a country that was torn apart by social unrest and war. His opponent, Hubert H. Humphrey, represented the liberal establishment and the Democratic Party. Wallace, the Independent Party candidate, represented the far right and the segregationist South.
